Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Ute War of 1879: Why the Indian Bureau Should Be Transferred From the Department of the Interior to the Department of War When, in 1867, after two years of incessant war, costly beyond precedent among indian outbreaks in its waste of valuable lives, the main body of hostile Sioux were driven by our cavalry across the British frontiers, our government and people relapsed into that indifference, or rather that absorption in private affairs, which is characteristic of all non-centralized governments and self-governing people, and is peculiarly so of our own. The volcanic uprising of the Northern States in 1861, was not more national in its character than the indifference with which they had for years regarded the increasing murmurs of war until the cloud no bigger than a man s hand had overspread the sky and the storm had burst. We are too young yet to be far-sighted in our policy; too confident of our ability to apply with crushing force the pound of cure to trouble ourselves to apply through years of comparative quiet the ounce of prevention. So it is with the Sioux war. The indignation and mourning that overspread the country when Custer s command died in Northern Wyoming, was forgotten when the Sioux were driven across the frontier save in those lonely households where stood a vacant chair. The fever was crushed for the hour what matter it the disease remained. The symptoms are destroyed, never mind the cause. Such has ever been the hand-to-mouth philosophy of our people, and never has it been more strikingly manifest than in our management of the Indians of the Plains. About the Publisher...
